POWER PREP

Your First Week's Meals, Sorted!

Benjamin Throssell

OH, DOGGIE.

These sauces are gonna be so, so good.

Except, now you've got a problem. A new problem. A problem I call…

The "blank page" problem.

Because you've got these five new taste-bombs that will upgrade any dish you whack 'em on, make dieting easier and more delicious, and turn your meals into things you crave.

But with this new upgrade comes a new responsibility:

Figuring out what the hell you're gonna put them on.

What are you gonna eat this week to start using the Five Sauces — and get lean and sexy doing it? Because unless you bought the "Five Sauces" for the flavour sensation alone, meals that get you sexy are the goal.

And thus, the problem, because, most likely…

YOU'RE STARING AT A BLANK PAGE.

But fear not! In your hands, at this very moment, you hold the solution.

We're about to make sure that these sauces aren't what could have marked a new chapter in your diet journey (and instead, sat in a dimly lit corner of your hard drive collecting digital dust, waiting for you to try them one day)...

NOPE. INSTEAD, I'M GOING TO SHOW YOU MY "POWER PREP" METHOD FOR MAKING MEAL PREP EASY, SIMPLE, DANGEROUSLY FAST — AND BEST OF ALL…

SOMETHING THAT YOU CAN POWER THROUGH ON REPEAT, EVERY SINGLE WEEK.

So, sit back and relax. In a matter of minutes, you're gonna be ready to rock with a perfect, low effort week that knocks your socks off and your tastebuds for six.

(Cricket reference. You might not get it. It's a thing. Moving on.)

Here's the agenda:

First

I'm telling you exactly what to buy and what to cook. (And don't worry, because I'm making it easy.)

Second

I'll explain why. You'll find out what makes these foods magic, and why I've put them together in such a specific way to unlock better, faster prep each and every week, with virtually zero effort.

Third

(And most powerful, honestly)...

You're getting the system to turn this into a personalised progress machine. You'll see how to harness the "Power Prep" method not just for simple meal planning, but also how to fine tune it to your needs each and every week, and force it to give you the gains you want.

The magical, magnificent, all-powerful foods, designed to transform your body and delight your senses are…

Rotisserie chicken.

Slow cooker pulled beef.

Microwave rice.

A loaf of bread (or a bag of wraps).

A bag of frozen green vegetables.

A bag of salad mix.

TA-DAAaaaAAAAAAaAAAA!

Yep, yep. Okay, enough with the applause. You're welcome.

Because you're thanking me right now, surely.

And you can see the vision, right?

No?

Or are you sat there thinking:

"He really just talked that talk, tellin' me this was gonna change my life and blow my mind, and then he hits me with the most aggressively boring shopping list in the history of all mankind? Doesn't this guy claim he likes cooking or something?"

Well yes, he does. And I hear you. But hang tight.

These are the foods you should buy and cook (though I'm being very generous with the word here, because I've set this up so you almost don't need to cook at all…)

They might seem very underwhelming, but that is indeed the list.

I promise you there is a very good reason for this, and I'm about to show you exactly what it is, in…

Section Two

The bafflingly brilliant, frankly, staggeringly geniu–

Okay, enough with the superlatives…

Let's just get straight down to why I've chosen these specific foods.

Actually — quickly, before I do, allow me to put your mind at ease and address something that might already be bubblin' away in your brain:

YOU MIGHT HAVE A BIG, FAT PROBLEM WITH WHAT'S ON MY LIST.

Maybe it sounds way, way too boring and sad.

Or maybe you're fine with it, but you're thinking one of the following:

> "Top Doggie, my kids are just not gonna go for those foods. They hate [whatever they're gripin' about]," or…

> "Benjamin, my husband cooks in our house. But he refuses to cook [whatever he objects to on the list] — it's not gonna work for us," or, for example…

> "Coach, my girlfriend can't stand [that perfectly reasonable thing you suggested]. Any ideas?"

Well, dear student: the answer is yes, I do have ideas.

But for now, whichever of the above is your objection, understand that I understand, and that you'll know exactly what to do in just a moment.

Okay, back to business.

Let me explain the sheer magic of this unassuming little list…

First—

REMEMBER, THIS THING IS CALLED "POWER PREP".

Now, look at the list. Look at how fast you're going to power through that prep.

Did you notice how much actual "cooking" you're going to need to do?

The answer is: basically none 🤓

Throw a big cut of beef in the slow cooker before you leave for work, shred a chook or two, and wash your salad greens. Shred the beef when it's done, throw it in containers.

Bingo, bango. Meal prep is 90% done.

Are you kidding me?

If that ain't Power Prepping, I don't know what is.

The number one idea here is ease and speed. This is fast, and this is easy — so easy, in fact, that you can't not do it. And that's the idea. This is the ground floor, do-it-in-your-sleep, basic as basic gets version.

You can, of course, juice it up. Improve on it however you want: seasoning the beef the night before (1.5-2% salt by weight and whatever spices you like — search 'equilibrium brining' to level up your game), roasting your own chickens, cooking rice from scratch in a stock, or using fresh, organic veggies you prepared yourself.

Make it as flash and complicated and fancy as you like. But the point is:

MAKE IT SO YOU'LL MAKE IT.

Make it something you can handle every week, no matter how short on time, busy or stressed out you are. Set the bar wherever YOU like, as long as you can Power through it every week, without excuses.

The list I'm giving you is designed to be so easy that anyone can do it. Yours can be whatever's right for you.

Second—

THE MAGIC, FAT-BURNING, MUSCLE-BUILDING PROPERTIES OF THE FOODS ON THIS LIST…

…do not exist.

Yup.

There is nothing — absolutely nothing — magic about these foods themselves.

And yet, this is where the magic really happens.

But to fully appreciate why, there's a critical idea you have to grasp first. And that is — please excuse the technical jargon here, by the way — well…

YOU AIN'T GETTING JACKED AND SEXY FROM ONE PERFECT WEEK, DOGGIE.

Now, I know you know that. It's obvious. But what it means is that we can't just be thinking about what's going to work for today's Power Prep… but what's going to keep working.

Unless you plan on coming up with a new Power Prep list, again and again, on repeat, every week, we need something that's a little more evergreen.

And that's precisely what this list is. It's evergreen, because…

Everything on this list is designed to go with everything else.

The magic is not in each element. The magic is in the whole.

Every element here is a free agent, chosen so you can pair and mix and match to your heart's content. You've got different proteins, different carbs, different veg and a bevy of different sauces to mix them in with. And that's a design with a big, beefy upside:

With just one list — one Power Prep that you can get better, faster and slicker at executing with your eyes closed every week — assembled differently each time and using a different one of your "Five Sauces"...

The combinations are virtually endless.

That buys us repeatability. And repeatability means we don't just have one perfect week, but the ability to string perfect weeks together again and again, making gains and building the body you want, one Power Prep at a time.

And before I forget — to circle back to your possible objections earlier: if you, your kids, your other half or your dog don't like something on that list for whatever reason?

Just bloody change it!

You've got my permission to rebuild this list however you see fit, to whatever's right for what you like.

As long as you've got the mix-and-matchability that my list gives you, you're golden.

Got it? Good.

That means we're ready to take on the final step…

The “backyard” system for forcing this method (whether it likes it or not) to give you results.

To teach you this method, however, I have to start with an admission.

I dunno how to break it to you, doggie. I, uh… I…

I DON'T HAVE A DAMN CLUE HOW TO GET YOU RESULTS.

But wait. Pause.

I know exactly how to get results. But what I mean is… I've got no freakin' idea what your background is, how much exercise you do, how many calories you need or even what your bloody goal is.

More: I have no way of getting that information right now, either. This is an ebook!

So you, you poor bastard, are sitting there listening to me yap at you, and totally unable to tell me those details. And I am stood here on my walking pad, typing out the advice that's gonna work for you anyway, regardless of the fact that I don't know your specifics 😈

To start, a little context.

Unless you're real green when it comes to this "changing your body" thing, you already know that what drives ANY and EVERY body transformation under the sun is calorie balance.

If you wanna lose weight, you need a negative balance (that is, you burn more than you consume).

If you wanna gain it, you need a positive balance (the opposite: more in, less out).

And unless you're real green when it comes to my philosophy on dieting, you already know my stance is: you should be tracking your calories to manage this. (If you're already macro tracking, by the way, then you can skip this section. Combine the precision and control of macro tracking with the ease and resilience of this approach, and watch what happens.)

But if you're not?

Well, two options:

a.

You can get my course on how to get started here…

b.

Or we can pull off the "backyard" version of it, and with a little effort, we can still make it work.

Let me show you how.

STEP ONE.

Go to the shops and buy enough food for the week.

I'll admit, I'm kicking off with an assumption here.

I'm assuming you've eaten food before, which means you know roughly how much you need to buy in a food shop 🤣

Bold of me, I admit. But look, maybe you haven't shopped for these specific foods in a while (or ever)... but I'm pretty sure you're smart enough to guesstimate. I believe in you.

If you do need a little more guidance, do this: estimate what you'd eat in one meal, multiply that by the number of times you're eating that ingredient this week, and buy that amount.

If you typically eat around 150g of protein per meal and you're having beef five times this week, you need 750g of beef.

Do that with each ingredient: multiply each ingredient by the number of times you'll eat it until you shop next.

STEP TWO.

Cook it and eat it.

Not exactly a tall order on the “cook it” front… but cook and eat is all there is to Step Two.

Use the Power Prep method we’ve covered. Mix and match to keep your tastebuds — or your spouse, or your kids, or your dog — happy.

If you ask me, you should eat the same meals as often as you can. I don’t mix and match within a week. I’d rather eat the same things, only have to prepare a handful of sauces, and copy each day over to the next. At the end of the week I reset — I mix up the approach, come up with a brand new set of combinations, and then I run it. It’s simple, and low fuss, and fun enough for me.

You do whatever works for you. If you want something new every meal and that’s a system you can repeat, I’m all for it.

STEP THREE.

Watch the gains roll in, baby.

That's the goal, anyway. That what you've been cooking and eating moves the needle the direction you want.

But here's the thing: it might not. And the first week, that's completely fine.

Because we are not banking on a perfect guess, doggie. We're banking on something better…

We're banking on repeatable.

That's what the Power Prep's bought us. We've got stable, staple meals, a deadly easy, life-proof prep we can iterate on every week, and a rock solid, reliable foundation we can juice up with variety and a splash of a new sauce whenever we need.

That repeatability means there's only one variable left:

Quantity.

When quantity is the only variable, we control the scale.

Everything else stays locked down, and quantity becomes a dial — your dial — for controlling what you put in, and thus, what results you get out.

See, when I was making the Five Sauces, I had to make sure that anyone could follow the recipe and get it right, every single time.

But every now and then, I'd taste a batch and go: "Hmm. Too salty. Too acidic. Something's off."

Now, if I'd gone and thrown the whole thing out and started from scratch with a completely new recipe — I'd have had absolutely no idea what I actually changed. Was it the vinegar? The garlic? Did I add too much of something else?

And I'd have no idea. Because I'd changed everything.

That's how most diets go. When the scale's not playing ball, you've got zero bloody clue what's causing it, and what lever to push or what dial to twist to fix it 🫠

But if you do what I did with the sauces — locking everything down, and tuning just one ingredient until it was right?

Boom. You're in control.

And that's the whole game, doggie:

Every week, ask one question:

DID THE SCALE MOVE IN THE DIRECTION I WANTED…

…AT THE PACE I WANTED?

If yes…

…don't touch a thing.

Rinse and repeat the Power Prep, with a little mixing and matching for happy tastebuds.

If no…

…no stress. Give it one more week.

If it's still off, then turn the dial:

A little less on the plate, or a little more movement. Make one change at a time, and watch the results.

Either way, you lock in the Power Prep system, and you've got a single dial to turn.

And by doing things this way, you turn the scale into your coach.

The number it flashes at you serves as your instruction on which way to turn the dial, instead of a report card you get mad about when the results don't look how you wanted.

If you want the scale to go down, just tell the deli server you want a little less this week, or stretch the food across an extra day, or cook up 10% less than your last shop.

If you want the scale to go up, do the opposite.

If you want to go deeper on this process and understand exactly why it works, I've got a video explaining it in more detail here, and you can watch it once you've knocked out the steps I've got for you below.

And with that, you're ready.

You've got the Five Sauces.

You've got a shopping list.

You've got the Power Prep method at your fingertips.

AND YOUR ACTION STEPS ARE SIMPLE:

1. Write your shopping list.

The sauces you're making and your base ingredients, whether you're using mine exactly or you've made a few swaps for you or your family. Either way works.

2. Pop it on a 'click and collect'.

Order your groceries online. Let someone do the hard work for you, and schedule it for pickup when it suits you.

3. Book your Power Prep.

Lock this into your calendar, and treat it like an important appointment… because it is.

4. Watch it work.

Nail your plan, enjoy actually enjoying your food and keeping it easy, tweak where needed, and watch the results roll in.

That's everything you need. A damned delicious, unreasonably easy week of mouth-watering diet food you can crave is coming right up.

So follow those steps, and let it rip!

– Coach.